Jas. L. Anderson

News reached here today that James L. Anderson, Treasurer of Buckingham county died there yesterday. He had been treasurer for many terms and was also president of the Merchants and Planters Bank at Dillwyn.

He was deservedly popular and his death will be generally regretted by the people of the county. He had been ill for sometime. His death will necessitate the appointment of a treasurer for the unexpired term by Judge Hutcheson.

There are two candidates for the office for 1927 election.

Sheriff Harry Griffin and Supervisor Dr. G. L. Morris. It is reported that Dr. Morris will be a candidate for appointment for the unexpired term.

That $1,000,000 Gap Fund

Our esteemed Times-Dispatch of 9th instant is in endorsing the program and allocation of the $1,000,000 road Gap fund of the people's road money for 1927 endorses same in this following editorial:

Unanswerable reason has dictated the course of Virginia State Highway Commission in so allocating highway construction funds for 1927 as to assure speedy extension of the Richmond-Washington concrete highway through to the North Carolina line. Important as numerous other roads and trunk highways in other sections are, it is ventured that no sections will seriously contend that any other one road in Virginia is of such vital importance as the chief north and south highways traversing the country from Washington to the North Carolina line.

It is understood that this road when completed, will constitute the longest uninterrupted concrete straight-away lying within the limits of any State; but that is not, of course, what makes it's completion imperative. What is of first importance to Virginia as of a whole is that a concrete straight through Virginia from north to south will take the State out of the mud once and forever in the minds of many thousands of tourists.

Gaps will be filled and roads will be constructed and completed throughout Virginia as quickly as possible under the present system; but this is the road that must be completed without the delay of a day longer than is flatly necessary.

For practical use and for essential advertising, the Washington- Richmond - North Carolina highway is the road of first value to all Virginia. The speedy completion of this trunk highway is so obviously and so logically the next step for the State Highway Commission to take that there was no other course before it than to take it.

1926 $1,000,000 Gap fund went on the Richmond to Washington road. Now 1927 $1000,000 Gap fund is proposed to fill in the gap from Richmond to N. C. No doubt this is desirable, and there can be no quarrel with the faithful watchman, Times Dispatch for applauding so important in appropriation for eastern section of State.

In this connection, we have thought the great main highway of Virginia would certainly appeal to the commission in the matter of allocating 1927 funds—Route No. 10. This is the largest as well as the most important highway in the system—traversing as it does the center of the state from the Tennessee line to Atlantic Ocean. The gap from Appomattox east is not even graded in many places and the people along this route from Appomattox to Petersburg are stirred by the commissioned action and will petition for a hearing and press the commission in every legitimate way for some of the money that we may be lifted out of the mud before the winter of 1928.

YANGTZE IS LIFE ARTERY OF CHINA

Only River Outside America Guarded by U. S.

Washington.—The only river outside American territory on which United States gunboats are constantly on guard; the busiest river waterway in the world; and the stream whose basin holds a greater population than any other.

Such, according to a bulletin from the Washington (D. C.) headquarters of the National Geographic society, is the Yangtze river of China, where, because of looting expeditions by Chinese factional troops, the United States naval authorities have warned American ships to curtail sailings on part of the stream.

"The Yangtze Kiang cannot quite claim to be either the greatest or the longest river in the world," says the bulletin. "Its length is about 3,000 miles and it is therefore exceeded by the Mississippi-Missouri, the Amazon, the Nile and one or two others. In volume it probably ranks third; after the Amazon and the Congo. But the Yangtze can lay claim to a much more important factor than mere bigness or length. With its tributary rivers, lakes and canals, it constitutes the inland water system most used by man as a carrier of his commerce.

"The Yangtze rises in central Tibet, at an altitude of 15,000 feet or more among the tangled mass of mountains and plateaus that also give birth to three other huge Asiatic streams: the Yellow, the Mekong and the Salween. In its journey to the sea it cuts through several distinct mountain ranges, forming some of the deepest river gorges in the world. At one point in Yunnan, the gorge of the river is 13,000 feet deep. In 1923 and 1924 three far western gorges of the Yangtze were explored and for the first time photographed by an expedition of the National Geographic society, headed by Joseph F. Rock.

Not Yangtze to Chinese.

"As a whole, the river is known as the Yangtze only to the western world. It has perhaps a dozen names to the Chinese at different points along its course. Only the two or three hundred miles nearest the ocean go by the name 'Yangtze Kiang' to the natives. The most popular names farther up are the Chinese equivalents of 'The Long River' and 'The Great River.'

"The Yangtze is a west-east river flowing in the lower temperate zone. Placed in the same latitude in America, the stream would rise in southwestern Arizona not far north of Yuma. It would cross into Texas just east of El Paso and zigzag southeastward to Monterey, Mexico, its northernmost point. Turning northeastward it would then parallel the Gulf coast a few miles inland, passing near Houston, New Orleans, and Pensacola, to flow into the ocean at Savannah. To duplicate actual conditions this imaginary American Yangtze should, of course, have a solid block of rich territory to the south where the Gulf of Mexico lies.

"On this relocated river, ocean-going ships would sail 640 miles to New Orleans, the relative position of Hankow, China's greatest distributing center. Smaller river steamers would ascend more than 300 miles farther to Ichang, the relative position of Chungking, head of steam navigation, passing en route through the famous gold-Yangtze gorges. Junks would ascend as far as the Texas-Mexican border and beyond.

"The Yangtze is the life artery of China. It drains an area of 770,000 square miles, equal to one-quarter the total area of the United States; and in this basin live approximately 175,000,000 people—once and a half the population of our 48 states.

Natural Commercial Advantages.

"At no other place in the world are three all-important economic factors making for trade so happily associated: a broad, deep-natural waterway for ships and a teeming, civilized population living on fertile, cultivated soil. The Yangtze, from 30 to 40 miles wide at its mouth, is a broad open door to the sea inviting the ships of the world to enter. And enter they do. Trans-shipping is unnecessary for 640 miles, ocean-going steamers ascending easily that distance to Hankow. But broad as the Yangtze is, it is crowded with traffic. The traveler finds no break in the unending stream of steamers, barges, junks and sampans. And frequently he encounters one of the huge rafts of logs on each of which the crew and their families have built a little village. On these floating islands, pigs and chickens wander about, children play, and women hang out their wash and carry on other domestic duties exactly as in some little Chinese hamlet on dry ground.

"When China was forced after the middle of the past century to open up interior ports to the commerce of the West, the ships of the United States, Great Britain, France, and other powers entered the Yangtze. This shipping was often in danger because of uprisings and looting bands. The powers, including the United States, therefore stationed gunboats on the Yangtze to protect their interests. This is the only place in the world where the United States navy maintains such a force on a foreign river. Since the World war this flotilla, now consisting of seven boats, has been known officially as the American Yangtze patrol. Their cruising itinerary takes them far up the Yangtze river.

OLD KAISERHOF IS DOOMED TO GO

Famous Hostelry to Become Office Building.

Berlin.—The German government has decided to purchase the historic Kaiserhof hotel on Wilhelmstrasse and to convert it into an office building.

Berlin society (hereby is greatly disturbed, and from every quarter protests are descending upon the ministry of finance. Parliament is being bombarded with pleas to veto the arrangement. Many Berliners feel that one of the chief connecting links between the old and the new Germany would thus be destroyed.

The Kaiserhof during the fifty years of its existence has been the scene of some of the most brilliant functions under the imperial regime. Here the weddings of the smart set were held. Whenever a large festival took place at court, to which potentates from foreign countries, some of the guests were lodged in the Kaiserhof, as the accommodations at the royal palaces were limited. For many years Prince von Bulow, former chancellor, was its star guest.

The emperor's brother, Prince Henry, the grand duke of Hesse and many other royal personages lived at the Kaiserhof, and among those who paid them formal visits were Czar Nicholas of Russia and King George and Queen Mary of England.
